ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY

The roots of the Child Development and Family Science Department can be traced to the introduction of the course, “The Child” in 1922-1923 in the then Department if Institutional and Household Management. In 1932 it became the Department of Household Management and Child Training. As of November 1960, it was known as the Child Development and Family Relations Department. The department as it is known today, Child Development and Family Science was created by the merger of the Child Development and Family Relations Department and the Home Management and Family Economics Department on July 1, 1985.

On September 17, 2009, the North Dakota State Board of Higher Education approved the department name change from the Child Development and Family Science Department to the Human Development and Family Science Department.
