Sister Reinhardt, well-known for her congenial and hospitable nature, had a gift of welcoming people and making them feel at home in her presence. Her sense of humor and love of a good conversation made her a delight to be with.

A great reader and self-educated woman, she devoured biographies and histories and was always eager for new knowledge. She especially liked to read and learn about Russia, the land in which she was born.

Sister Reinhardt was devoted to Benedictine life and to her God and spent many hours in prayer. In her last days, she looked forward to going home to God. We pray that Sister Reinhardt is now enjoying a wonderful conversation with God in the banquet feast of heaven.
