A Case For Simple Arithmetic

Simple arithmetic is not included on the modern college curricu-But it has its place, nonetheless.

An instructor, attempting to make clear a less simple point, may refer to the well-known addition problem, two plus two makes four, to put it across. So, too, may spokesmen for North Dakota's schools of higher education when they meet the state legislature in coming scholarship bracelets this term for

Before the legislature are appropriation bills which would increase the operating funds of state colleges and provide for needed construction on college campuses.

Indeed, mathematicians still hold that two plus two does equal four. If this be true, as one can hardly deny, the North Dakota legislature has a simple decision to make.

Operating an institution of learning costs money. Faculty members must be paid-and adequately too, if the best ones are to be had. Buildings must be kept in repair and replaced occasionally. When enrollment increases, new facilities must be made available. All these things require money. When that money is provided and used, education continues. When it is not provided, education stops. It's simple arithmetic.

No one expects that the legislature will refuse all educational appropriations. In all probability, education will continue. However, one times two is not four and, unless mathematical science is doing us wrong, never will be. Should the legislature limit its appropriations to something less than the institutions require, that much less education will be provided. Unless members of the legislature poke their collective heads in the sand and also plug their ears, they cannot fail to be aware of this simple truth.

Two alternatives are available for the legislators to ponder. First, they may decide to provide funds adequate for the schools' long-range needs. Second, they may decide to limit enrollment in state schools to a level which they feel the state can finance, thereby making it necessary for North Dakota students in excess of that number to find schooling elsewhere. Beyond killing the educational program altogether, there are no other choices.

There are two manners in which one may approach a financial problem. He may say: "Here is what is needed; buy it," or he may say, "Here is my money; what can I get?" Few will deny there is merit to both viewpoints. North Dakota educators, who are aware of the very real needs facing education in the state, belong to the first school. Some legislators, perhaps, belong to the second. Let's look into their reasoning.

Suppose that the state were suffering from a depression, and only a small amount of money were available. Try as they would, the people's representatives would be unable to fill all needs, however legitimate. Whether they cared to or not, they'd have to make needs Henderson, house. fit the purse. Under such circumstances no one could justifiably criti-

However, must North Dakota today maintain a frugal attitude toward legitimate needs? The Spectrum doesn't think so. Neither do economists who are aware that bank deposits in the state have increased several hundred per cent since December 7, 1941, and over a thousand per cent since the depression low of the thirties. It may be good politics, both in North Dakota and Washington, to hold down, or even slash, taxes at this time, but it isn't good economics. Even Joseph in Egypt knew the value of absorbing excess during fat years to sustain life during the lean.

There is so much talk about the needs of education today that there is a real danger that the American public will start to take Larry Iverson and George Strum, them for granted and do nothing, as has been the case with corrupt county agents in meeting here. politics. "Something ought to be done," says the citizen as he passes the poll, but nothing ever is. Yet, America cannot afford for a minute to be apathetic about education. It's that sort of apathy that woos disaster:

One may say that America cannot afford to fall behind technologically in this era of rapid scientific advancements. This would undoubtedly be true. What is more important, however, is that Ameri- Irvine in their fare. cans cannot afford to lose sight of human values and basic philosophical truths during this crucial period. ### LCT Schedules Comedy As Initial Presentation For Winter Quarter

The Far-Off Hills, a three-act comedy by Lennox Robinson, will be presented in the Little Country theater Jan. 28-29 as the first student dramatic presentation of the winter term.

Plot of the play concerns the efforts of two young Irish girls to marry off their father, and the resultant complications.

Members of the cast include Bernie Bermann, Pelican Rapids, Minn.; Edith Gelder, Fargo; Jane Hensel, Detroit Lakes, Minn.; Dorothy DuVall, Jamestown; John Jerry Mulready Hesse, Fargo; Fargo; Bob Barckley, Page; Shirley Wilson, Fargo; Ernest Johnson, Fargo; Gloria Crews, Neche.

Direction of the play is being nandled by Miss Constance West, with the sets designed by Mason Arvold and constructed by Arvold and Bill Snyder. The play production class of the speech department is assisting.

Charity Ball Set For February 14

First big social event of the winter term, the Charity ball will be revived February 14, when the 17th in the series sponsored by the Panhellenic council will be held at the Crystal ballroom.

The ball is definitely on the college schedule of events this year for the first time since 1942. A revival was planned last year, but conflicting social dates caused its cancellation.

The Statesmen, college dance band, will play for the dance, in which the girls escort the boys.

Proceeds of the ball will be used for a scholarship for some girl who is partially dependent on herself for financial support.

Press Sees Value In College Work

Los Angeles, Calif.-(ACP)-Opportunity in our progressive industrial country is unlimited for specialized—college-trained — men and women, it was discovered recently in a tour of Southern California industries by press representatives from some 10 local colleges and universities. The tour was sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers.

Whether the individual desires to organize his own business or to join a well established organization, the chances of success are great for an adequately trained college graduate. This fact seemed evident to the executives of all the industries visited.

Throughout all the plants visited large and small, the managementlabor situation presented no serious problem. In fact the workers in about half of the companies expressed complete satisfaction with their working conditions on numerous occasions by voting to stay out of unions altogether.

Purpose of the tour was acquaint college students with the problems and production methods of California manufacturers and to demonstrate the opportunities for men and women with college training.

For three quarters, a rejuvenated Bison five looked able to snare a victory from a favored Panther quint, but the Bison tired badly in the final frame as the Panthers racked up 17 points in overcoming a 36-32 third quarter deficit.

Paul Brostrom and Nick Soulis sent the Bison into a quick 5-1 lead early in the initial quarter and the Herd matched the Peds throughout the closing minutes to manage a 9-6 quarter advantage. After spotting the visitors four quick points early in the second frame, the Herd, sparked by Nick Vujovich, matched the Iowans point for point to leave the floor at the intermission deadlocked at

Ends Against Jims, MSTC

Concluding the January home schedule, Coach Chalky Reed's basketball squad takes on Jamestown college Saturday and Moor-head State Teachers Tuesday.

If the Bison can improve their shooting efficiency to go along with the improved bankboard and floor play, they should slide back into the win column with ease.

Added to the squad Monday was Tom Corrigan, a former student at the University of Minnesota and Bemidji high athlete.

Led by veteran Lew Carlson, Jamestown lacks height but is well fortified with former lettermen. The Jimmies hold a December decision over Concordia at Jamestown, but in the New Year Dragon tournament lost to Concordia and MSTC.

Twice victims of the Herd, MSTC is expected to give the Bison more trouble in their third meeting. The first game was a four-point victory, 44-40, in December, and the second tilt was even closer despite the 45-37 score in the Dragon tourney. The Dragons have won their last five starts.

In conference play this week UND takes on USD and Augustana Friday and Saturday, Morningside plays host to a future Bison foe — Dakota Wesleyan — Friday, and SDSC travels to Iowa Teachers and Bradley for weekend games.

Staff Positions Open On Furrows

Many staff positions are still open on the Bison Furrows, agriculture magazine, according to Ralph Harmon, editor, and Kirk Bellows, business manager.

Harmon and Bellows, both juniors in agriculture, were named to the posts shortly before Christmas by the board of publications.

The Furrows, published each term before the war, is being revived this year following a five-year lapse. It features articles dealing with agricultural activities on the campus, experiment sta-tion, and general coverage of the school of agriculture.

First published in 1938, the Furrows reached a circulation mark of 2,000 before suspending publication.
