

The Depot, once an epicenter of exchange for both goods and travelers alike is now but a time capsule for trains. Dedicated to educating the community on the rich history of Duluth, as well as about historic trains which allowed the city to greatly prosper, this museum is often neglected because of its distance from canal park and its lack of tourism appeal.

Rising above the freeway overlooking Superior, the lookout tower instantly becomes a focal point of patrons entering the city instilling curiosity concerning the interestingly shaped structure.
