Mediating the needs of public spaces and private spaces within revitalization projects is critical to the future development of cities and communities. Public spaces focus on resources that are meant to improve people's quality of life through social benefits. Private spaces provide resources at the discretion of the individual and often improve quality of life through economic growth.

Although these two types of spaces function differently, public and private realms of the city have a symbiotic relationship. Well-designed public spaces encourage the development of private spaces. In return, private spaces are critical to the success of public spaces.

The boundaries between public and private spaces are what determines the way the two types of spaces function together. It is a form of social organization and also prevents one type of space from invading the other. The Boundaries in this project are meant to be adaptable - to change the relationship between more public and more private spaces based upon the needs of an ever changing community.

Moveable walls change division of space and function as community display and public outreach.
