

12th Ave. bridge plans discussed

A replacement for the inadequate 12th Avenue Bridge may finally be built but North Dakota Highway Department officials told a group of over 400 persons Wednesday night that the project would not be complete for at least five years.

Highway officials presented two alternate plans to replace the existing two-lane structure: a four-lane structure and a two-lane structure.

Citizen support seemed to center on the second plan, the consensus seeming to be that a four-lane bridge would be undesirable for the 12th Avenue neighborhood.

Plan A, which many of the people attending the meeting seemed to oppose, contained engineering and design plans for a two traffic lanes, a bicycle lane and a pedestrian walkway.

The total width of the bridge proposed in Plan A was 63 feet. Several provisions for special access were clarified in the plan, with later speakers labeling these access ramps as potentially dangerous because of heavy traffic.

The four-lane structure is to cost an estimated $8,480,000, with an additional $825,000 required for the approaches to the bridge.

If the city were later to expand the two lane structure to four lanes, estimated funds of about $2,400,000 would be required.

City commissioners said they would commit themselves to putting Plan B into effect because of citizen support for the proposal.

The second proposal involved the construction of a continuous structure, involving only two lanes at a cost of approximately $6,100,000. Additional costs for the approaches would be $290,000.

Robert Bradley, the highway department chief engineer, said if the City Commission were to approve the plans immediately, it would be at least three years before any contracts were let. He added that it would take an additional two years for the actual construction of the bridge.

SU President L.D. Loftsgard said the bridge was badly needed.

He referred to the 12th Avenue entrance as "one of the biggest embarrassments we have in the community."

Student President Steve Bolme and student Vice President L. Roger Johnson agreed, urging a two-lane structure be constructed.

Johnson voiced specific objections to the traffic and pedestrian problems that would be encountered should a four-lane structure be constructed.

"I hope we don't in any way have to have a four-lane bridge connecting roadways between University Drive and Tenth Street. Let's avoid the pedestrian traffic that would result because of normal campus pedestrian activity."

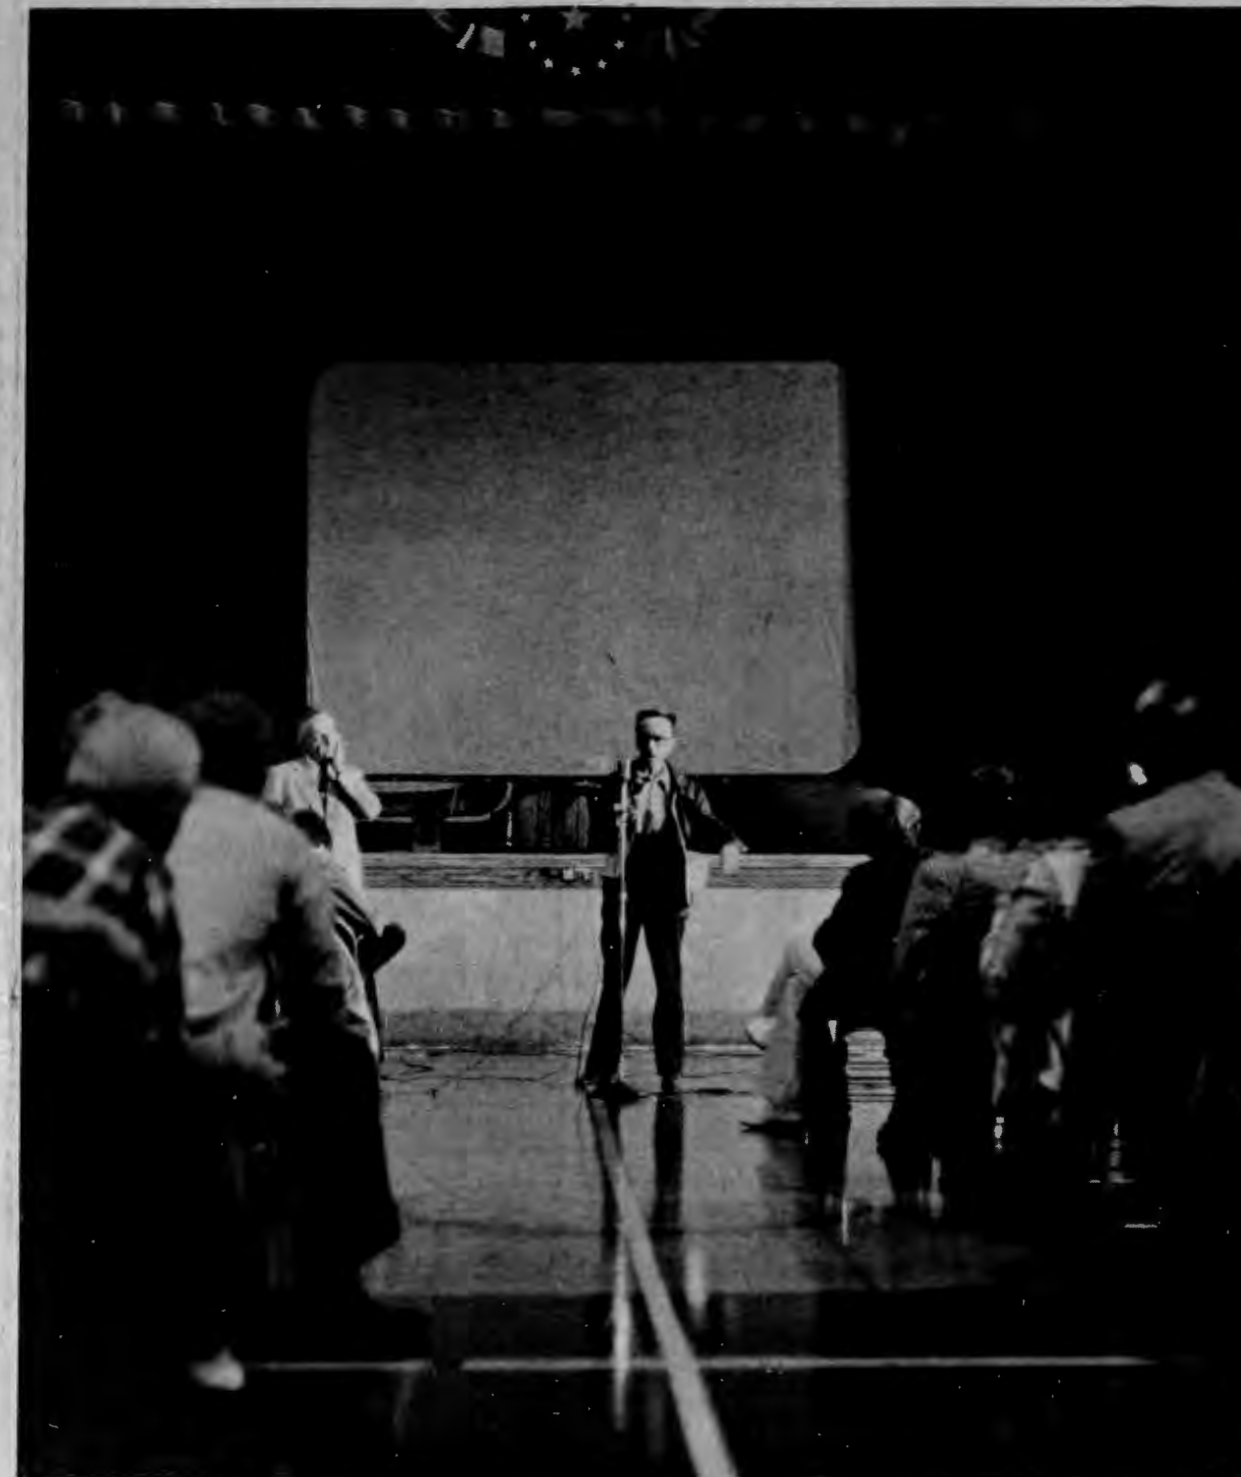

Bolme and Johnson also questioned the future speed limit, replacement of trees destroyed, the need for a signal crossing at 14th Street and a proposed six foot widening of 12th Avenue. The two suggested rerouting traffic to 19th Street and building a four-lane roadway in that area, which they said could better accommodate the traffic.

Apathy said reason for political fair

The overcoming of student political apathy is the primary aim of a political fair scheduled Oct. 10-11 at SU, according to political science professor John Monzingo, an organizer of the event.

Monzingo said the fair, to be held in the area between the chemistry buildings and the Union in good weather and Alumni Lounge of the Union in poor, will be divided into two parts, booths and speakers.

Booths will be sponsored by state and local candidates, political organizations and clubs, including the College Republicans and Young Democrats, and various special interest groups, including some dealing with Garrison Diversion, the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) and coal development.

The major events, Monzingo noted, will be the speeches. Tentatively expected are national, state and local candidates, including U.S. Senate contestants William Guy and James Jungroth.

In addition, various issues—ERA, coal development, faculty salary increase requests and student rights among others—will be discussed.

"Apathy has been prevalent on this campus ever since I can remember," Monzingo said. "Many students believe apathy is so ingrained it's not worth doing anything about. We hope to prove then wrong," he added.

The professor noted recent primaries across the nation have shown students can be decisive in political races. "The fact that candidates have agreed to speak here is a sign that they at least think the student vote will count. Possibly the candidates have more faith in the student vote than students do."

Monzingo participated in a political fair at California State University in Los Angeles in 1966, and after coming to SU began

A seamy gander at Mother Goose

By Ginger Newton

Mother Goose's feathers be shorn! Behind that sweet, motherly smile reeking of pie and cheese lurks a soul would make a hardened wrecker cringe.

Her poetry, generally deemed as silly, sentimental, fun stuff is, in reality, full of sin, depravity, and other

An overview of Ms. Goose's poetry will serve to show what I mean. Let us take, for our first example, the seemingly innocuous "A-Cake."

This deceptively simple poem of a baker baking a cake. But at all? Mais non! There are clear indications within the poem that it is referring to drugs. Spiking the cake with "B" is a culture talk for spiking it with Benzedrine.

Also, the baker is urged to hurry (obvious reference to the drug-user's frantic dependence on the drug) in making the cake for "Baby" (drug-culture jargon for girl-friend or mistress) and "me."

For our second example, let us take "Jack be Nimble." The poem tells of a boy jumping over a lit candlestick. Since the boy takes great pleasure in this strange pasttime, it is obvious that he is a sado-masochist. Enough said.

"Wee Willie Winkie" provides us with our third example. Willie (a name suggestive in itself) runs through the town clad only in pajamas, peeping in windows.

Very little scrutiny is required to tell us this: Mr. Winkie is a deviate, whose sexual perversions manifest themselves in the form of exhibitionism and Peeping-Tomism.

The root of his troubles is, of course, the fact that he is "wee." This smallness of size has caused social ostracization and has led him to lead a life of perversion.

As our fourth example, let us take "Little Miss Muffet." It is readily apparent to the discerning reader that Miss Muffet's encounter with a spider on her tuffet is a drug induced hallucination. She was having a bad trip.

The hallucinogen was obviously in Miss Muffet's macrobiotic lunch of curds and whey.

A fifth example is from a combination of two rhymes suspiciously alike in title and content: "Little Boy Blue" and "Little Bo Peep."

In both cases, the poem's persona has lost an animal. This negligent behavior on behalf of the two could be due to a distracting activity (obviously sexual) in Boy Blue's haystack.

Also, the loss of animals in both poems could be possible referents to the two characters' loss of virginity.

These are but a few examples of my assertion. Obviously, there are many more. Consider, for instance, "Curly Locks." Isn't she a blatant example of a kept woman?

Or "Rub-a-Dub-Dub." Isn't this strange behavior on behalf of the three men suggestive of homosexuality? And, certainly, "Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater's" behavior is far from normal.

If this does not serve to convince you, witness her little ditty intended as a final commentary to chapter six of Dr. David Reuben's first best-seller: Jack be nimble, Jack be quick, What makes you come so soon?

VA rep to aid campus GIs

The Veteran's Administration (VA) has designed a new program to provide personal service to veterans receiving money for their education under the GI Bill.

Henry E. Rasmussen Jr. became the veteran's "Man on Campus" Aug. 1. He joined the VA last June after serving almost two years in the Marine Corps.

Rasmussen will help resolve individual payment questions and expects to eliminate many payment delays caused by changes of address, dependency status or school courses.

"If the veterans have applied for and not received advanced pay for fall quarter, stop up at the office and we'll get it for you," said Rasmussen, who will also be on hand to assure proper certification by both the student and the school.

Vet Reps will contact any veteran who drops out of school and urge his return. Rasmussen will serve as a liaison for any campus veteran's groups, brief them on benefit matters and consult SU administration and faculty on VA matters.

Under the new program announced last May, the VA will have a representative at each college in the nation. If not an individual representative, a traveling "rep" will be available on a set schedule.

Rasmussen can be located in room 336, Ceres Hall, from 1-4:30 p.m. the first Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each month, the second Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, the third Monday, Thursday and Friday and the fourth Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Rasmussen is one of 1,327 Vet Reps hired. Priority was given to Vietnam Era Veterans with campus experience. Rasmussen received orientation at the VA office in Fargo, then took a two-week intensive study course at Case Western University in Cleveland, Ohio.

He attended Moorhead State College and holds a B.A. in political science, a B.S. in education and is working on a B.A. in accounting.

'Three Dog Night' play baroque, rock, 50s

By Bonnie Brueni

At 7:30 p.m. the New Fieldhouse was already about as crowded as it was going to get. About 4,000 "Three Dog Night" fans watched a classic game of frisbee while they waited.

It was exactly 8 p.m. when the lights went out and the warm-up band, "Styx," came on stage to the sounds of "William Tell Overture."

"Styx" had a good sound in spite of poor vocals, overwhelming bass and too much volume. Unless you enjoy watching musicians coerce microphones, a few mellow tunes like the old Beatles song, "Lies," were "Styx" only saving grace.

"Styx" is a good band, but there is a tremendous difference between a good band and a great band. When "Three Dog Night" opened its performance the contrast was amazing.

"Three Dog Night" has no leader—no single musical hero. Instead, the band has three outstanding vocalists—Cory Wells, Chuck Negron and Danny Hutton—backed up by a band that can take over on its own.

The group staged an hour and a half of boogie, rhythm and blues and a terrific combination of exuberance, depth and professionalism.

The concert began with a reminder of what "Three Dog Night" is as they played what may have been titled "The Greatest Hits of Three Dog Night," with songs like "Mama Told Me Not To Come," "One," "Black and White," and "Eli's Coming."

The introduction of a man called "The Wizard," Jimmy Greenspoon, gave the concert a new dimension as he marshalled a trip from the early Baroque to hard rock on two electronic organs. The Wizard's performance ended with spoofs of flame and drowning the stage in dry ice clouds.

Floyd Sneed conducted a experience in rhythm on the drums just before the whole group came back on in pink 50s-style suits. They got it together with great vocals and all the action that make bee-bop rock-and-roll so famous today.

"Three Dog Night" was brought back once to play their 1972 hit "Joy to the World."

Exhausted and feeling good the concert fans left, looking ahead to seeing the Ozark Mountain Daredevils and Steppenwolf.

Daredevils will perform Sept. 28 at the Old Fieldhouse.

Internship provides fascinating look at Washington

By Kathy Mulkern

When Karen Steidl returned from her summer in Washington, D.C., she brought six suitcases, two more than the four she had with her when she started out last June.

Autographer photos of Senators Edmund Muskie and Sam Ervin, portfolios of information given to her by her employer, Sen. Milton Young (R-ND), a copy of the Washington Post the day Nixon resigned—these are among the items she brought back as reminders of her stay on Capitol Hill.

Karen was chosen to be one of four paid interns working for Young over the summer.

"We left June 3," Karen said, "and started working the fourth." A Young staff member drove her and fellow intern Nancy Rose to Young's office suite that first morning. Here they were turned over to Mrs. Young.

"Mrs. Young is in charge of all the office staff. She introduced us to everybody and put us to work," Karen recalled.

As interns they had no specific jobs, but did whatever needed attention. Typing letters dictated by Young was one of Karen's duties. She also helped prepare press releases so they could be sent to Young's Bismarck headquarters for AP release, stuffed petitions and mailed flags.

"I was really surprised at how many people write and request flags," Karen laughed. "The flags are flown over the capitol for a day, then are taken down and mailed."

She worked eight hours a day, although she was allowed time off to attend meetings or debates in congress. "Mrs. Young was pleased we were interested in things like that, and she would give us time off to take them in," Karen said.

In addition to this, she attended special assemblies for the 11,000 Washington summer interns, for which various senators or congressmen spoke.

This still left Karen plenty of time for sight-seeing. "I think I saw just about everything to see," she began, but amended herself, "No, I don't think anyone could ever see everything. There were things I passed up at the time that I now regret not seeing."

She specifically mentioned that she would have like an opportunity to tour the offices of the Washington Post. Karen's summer experiences increased her interest in a career in political journalism.

She visited the senate press rooms several times and found the reporters there are very interesting and congenial ("except of course when they had a pressing story to get out.").

"Politics is so fascinating," Karen said, "it seemed like the only field for me. Everything I have studied about in political science was visible to me there, and it made me realize how much it is necessary to know in order to comprehend what is going on. Now I want to learn. I realize I have to educate myself a lot to compete with others there, and it's made me eager to learn," she finished.

One of Young's secretaries had an apartment not far from Karen's, and she often took Karen to work. Otherwise, she relied on cabs for transportation. "I'm an expert at hailing cabs," Karen laughed. "A couple of times I tried taking buses, but I really didn't care for them—they were too crowded and noisy."

Karen repeatedly praised Sen. and Mrs. Young for their kind treatment. Mrs. Young took her and Nancy to the Senate dining room, a place reserved only for senators and their immediate families. The Youngs also treated the interns to an evening at the Columbia Country Club.

There were adjustments for Karen to make upon arriving in Washington. "Washington is a polluted city," Karen admitted. "The sky is never blue there as it is here. The first few days we were out there they had air warnings—heart and lung disease patients can't go outside those days because the air is too dangerous for them to breathe," she continued.

Twice Karen toured the White House, once on a special intern tour, and once again on a regular tour. Nixon was in his office while Karen toured, but was not accessible to the public.

"The White House is right downtown," Karen said, "only one and a half blocks from one of Washington's largest department stores."

Karen Steidl

The Jefferson Memorial and the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts are two places she especially appreciated seeing. (A poster for the Kennedy center found its way back home with Karen)

"I was always under the impression that the Kennedy center was built by the United States," Karen remarked, "but actually, other countries donated money for rooms, and then those rooms are fixed up to depict that country's culture. It's just beautiful," she sighed.

Watergate was an important event in Washington this past summer, and Karen remembers that also. "No one expected Nixon to resign. He was determined he was innocent. The feeling around Washington was that he would be impeached, which would have hurt the Republican congressmen trying to campaign for re-election," she replied.

"I felt sorry for him when he resigned. Everyone was happy, because it seemed like a good

Womens' tennis meets UND

The women's tennis team opened its fall season by competing in the UND Invitational Tournament. No team scores were compiled since there were only individual winners and the event was not meant as team competition.

Four schools competed in the tournament: Bemidji State College, UND, Concordia and SU. Each doubles team and singles player competed eight times against each other school for a total of 24 games.

Several Bison girls placed well in the tournament. The number one doubles team of Sue Smith and Pam Ness placed second with a 13-11 won-loss record for the tournament. LeAnn Arnseth, SU's number one singles player placed second in her flight with a 16-8 record and number four singles player Debbie Mucha took first place in her flight with a 17-7 record.

The women play next on Sept. 25 at Concordia College, then host UND and Bemidji State College for a tournament here.

Bison x-country finishes seventh

The Bison cross country team made a fair showing in their first run of the season last Saturday. The team placed seventh in the Ames Iowa Invitational with a total of 208 points. Iowa State took first place with 64 points and North Central Conference foe South Dakota State University placed second.

Top runners for the Bison were Roger Schwegal who placed third among all runners and Mike Bowman who finished eighth.

Of the top six members of last year's team only two have returned—juniors Roger Schwegal and Warren Eide. Of the ten new members of the team, coach Bruce Whiting tabs Freshman Mike Bowman and Todd Peterson as prospective standouts.

The Bison travel to Medora on Saturday to compete in the Teddy Roosevelt Run, then will run at the University of Minnesota on Sept. 27.

Despite 27-15 loss to Arizona Coach still eyes North Central win

By Rich Reith
Despite last week's 27-15 loss to Northern Arizona University (NAU), head football coach Ev Kjelbertson is still optimistic about his team's chances of winning the North Central Conference championship.

"We played much better against NAU than we did against Omaha but then we were facing a much better team," commented the coach, "and I think we will see continued improvement this week."

The coach was especially pleased with the hitting tempo and crispness of the team, which he described as the best he had seen since the middle of last season.

"We killed ourselves with mental mistakes—overthrows, dropped passes, penalties and the like," said Kjelbertson, "but those mistakes can be corrected and we are working on them."

The Bison offense was much improved over its first game and seems to have found the key to that new wing-T. They led NAU in every offensive statistic except the score, as evidenced by their 349 yards total offense as opposed to NAU's 186 yards.

But the team also led in passes intercepted and yards penalized, most of which came at crucial points in the game and broke the back of SU drives.

The Bison's first conference test comes this Saturday as they host Morningside's "aerial circus" at 1:30 at Dacotah Field.

Morningside is winless so far this year. Last week's 31-21 loss to Omaha brought their record to 0-2.

The main offensive threat Morningside will bring to Dacotah Field will be their all-out aerial attack. In their first two games they threw the ball 75 times, primarily to sophomore Joe Longo, a 6'3" 190-pound wide receiver.

So the SU secondary will get its second big test in as many weeks. Last week they watched the NAU combination of Dan Troupe to Kevin Riley click for four key completions and 94 yards.

"We played well despite the 27 points on the scoreboard except against three pass plays," said Bison defensive coach Jim Driscoll. "We must learn to prevent the key completion when the opponent is in fourth-down territory."

The offense will be facing a split-six defense, although Morningside also switches into the Oklahoma 5-2 defense. It was the split-six that gave the offense so much trouble in its 3-0 win over Omaha. But offensive line coach Marv Mortenson indicated that they had no problem blocking against the same defense while rolling up 349 yards of offense against NAU.

Overall, the coaches are optimistic about Saturday's game and the rest of the season. "I still think that we can take the conference championship," says Coach Kjelbertson.

"The one thing that bothers me about Saturday's game, though, is Morningside's passing game," he continued. "The passing game has a tendency to turn a football game into a one-on-one athletic contest. It takes away much of the importance of the decisions and strategy of the coach."

"That makes me nervous..."

UND golf team holds 12-stroke margin

The SU golf team opened its fall season Tuesday, bowing to UND by 12 strokes, 563-575. The match was held on Fargo's Edgewood Golf Course.

The medalist of the match was UND's John McAnroe with a one over par 72 score. Low man for the Bison was freshman Jay Uhlmann with a 76. The scores for the team ranged from Uhlmann's 76 to a high of 89 on the par 71 course.

Last year's golf team was the North Central Conference champion but virtually all of that team is gone. The lone returnee is senior Paul Bibelheimer and golf coach E.E. Kaiser, who has had trouble finding players to take the places of those who left.

"I really don't understand it," said Kaiser. "Last year I had 19 men try out for the team but this year only six men showed up. I need a minimum of seven men just to field a team. The gate is absolutely wide open for people to make the team and no one seems to want to take advantage of it. I'm in dire need of some golfers."

olution to the Watergate mess." Young never said much during the Watergate period, according to Karen. "As a ranking Republican senator he probably would have been a juror in an impeachment trial," she said.

Karen had a chance to see or almost all the figures commonly associated with national politics. Muskie and Erwin were two of her favorites.

"Once, after Muskie had been on the Senate floor, I saw him in the lobby and told him his speech had impressed me, and he spoke to me for a minute or so," she commented.

Muskie also had the distinction of being the first "famous personage" Karen saw after arriving in the capitol city. "I was so excited about that," Karen recalls. "By the end of summer the glamour had worn off, and it wasn't anything to run into someone 'famous,'" she continued.

Coming home after three months in Washington was more difficult than Karen had anticipated. "All the way home I had this strange sensation like I was coming home for a visit, but would be returning to Washington," she said. "I didn't want to leave." In addition, when leaving Washington the temperature was in the 90s. Fifty degree temperatures awaited her at the Fargo airport when she landed.

Karen does intend to go back. "Maybe not next year, but in '76. If there is any way I can be out there, I'm going."

Nineteen new federal buildings are going up by the bicentennial year, and the city is being washed and painted in preparation for the deluge of tourists, she said.

Tourists were yet another of Karen's discoveries about capitol hill. "I've never seen so many girl or boy scouts in my life," she joked.

Men find new home in womens' dorm

There are a bunch of men living in Weible Hall, a women's dorm.

Iva Theilges, head resident at Weible, said "The dorms are over-crowded, but the men should be back in a men's dorm within a few weeks."

In the meantime 27 men have been living on the first floor in the south wing of Weible.

Mark Swanson, a senior living in Weible, said, "there really haven't been any serious problems so far."

Scott Lee, a sophomore, said he would stay if they decided to keep the dorm mixed.

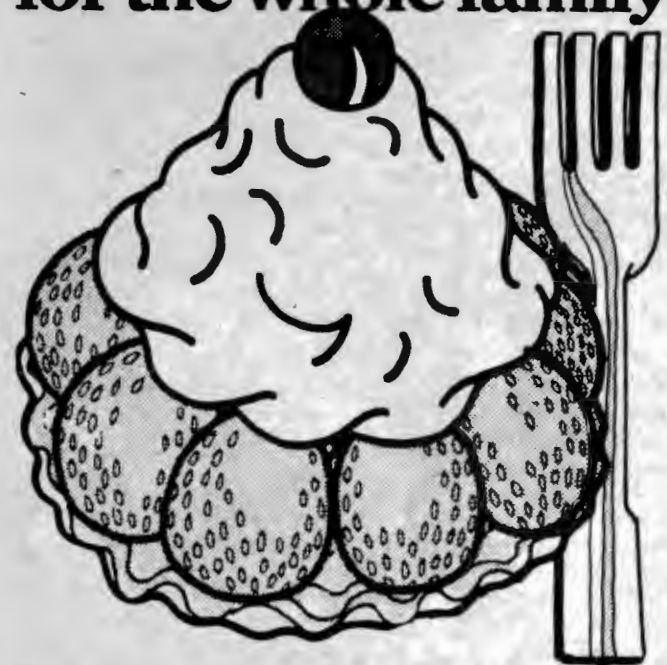

Several men said living in a women's dorm is not any different than living in any other dorm but most felt it was much easier to meet girls.

Most of the men in Weible said they preferred living in a women's dorm then a men's dorm.

Mike Peterson, a sophomore, said the head resident and the assistant resident were rather strict when compared to other dorms because of the co-ed living situation.

Most of the men considered themselves lucky to be assigned to Weible, after all, "27 men to 98 women are pretty good odds for any dorm."
