MSU professor says students today are reading better

Scare tactics that berate the public schools won't help children read any better and neither will oversimplified phonic or back-to-the-basics crusades that latch on to single-issue reforms.

What will help, according to Leslie Crawford, a reading consultant and education professor at MSU, is a calm, flexible approach in teaching that stresses the meaning as well as the mechanics of reading.

Crawford, vice president-elect of the Minnesota Reading Association and a leading researcher of reading methods, says American children read as well, if not better, than any in the world. And because of that, he's at odds with the spate of recently-publicized reports criticizing the status of reading education in this country.

"We're a nation of readers," Crawford said. "Just look at our libraries and our shopping malls. Despite television and other distractions, magazines, newspapers and books surround us. The schools must

Freshmen unprepared in math and science areas

By Kathy Mahoney

A few years ago, the public learned why Johnny couldn't read. Now, it is learning not only that Johnny can't read, but that he probably can't write or expect to do very well in math and science as well.

MATH

It is becoming more obvious that the entering freshman is not prepared in math and science areas, according to William Shreve, chair of the SU's math department.

"There is a general decline of the coming freshmen. They have lowered math abilities and background, which the university has to deal with."

Fall quarter showed third-week enrollments of Calculus 190 (the beginning calculus course of a series of math requirements for fields of engineering) at 442; 179 received grades A through C; 99 received Ds, 99 received Fs and 99 dropped the course.

"There is a definite problem when 10 percent of the class enrollment is not meeting standards," Shreve said.

These standards are important, said. "One should never knowingly compromise with standards. A university is called on for its quality products. If an inferior product is produced, the university will not be called on for further products."

Some students need the remedial courses.

In a report released by Ohio State University on "Improving School-to-School Articulation in Ohio," results show nationwide, mathematics enrollments decreased 22 percent between 1975 and 1980 and remedial enrollments increased 72 percent.

"Courses like Math 100 can be seen as a refresher course or the basis of where the student should begin, not just bonehead math," said Dr. Roger Kern, Director of Student Academic Affairs.

Students don't realize there is a math-placement test. At orientation, students receive packets that contain a math test. It's the student's responsibility to take the test and determine his or her score with the math results enclosed, Kern said. "They can determine which math level they are really at, not just what their advisers suggest."

This self-testing and self-placement could eliminate freshmen failing in math courses.

Shreve said Math 100 enrollments resulted in 166 passing and 44 failing.

SCIENCE

The concern is mutual in other departments as well.

Dr. Don Scoby, professor of biology, said, "Thirty-six percent of Biology 101 students received Ds and Fs fall quarter. Last spring quarter, 46 percent of the 101 enrollment failed. By the third week of classes, 16 percent dropped the course and quarterly, 1 percent never even show for the class."

In the chemistry department, Chair Dr. Mark Gordon cited reasons why students take the remedial chemistry as a science required or survey of their skills for aligned sciences or in preparation for required classes.

Fall-quarter results showed a large number of Chemistry 101 students passing successfully. However, at higher level classes, there are fewer passing successfully.

Responsibility of who (secondary or post-secondary institutions) should be teaching these remedial courses is a "mixed bag," Gordon said.

"If all North Dakota high schools had a strong curriculum offered in the math/science areas, the universities would have an easier job; but is that realistic to believe with the small high schools of North Dakota," he added.

"Our open policy for general admission to the university feeds to the increasing problem of math/science deficient students," said Dr. R.D. Koob, dean of math and science. The university requires only one unit of algebra, though it is often not enforced. Koob, as well as other faculty, would like to see the ruling enforced.

Another form of entry to college is by ACT or PSAT scores. The "Nation at Risk" report demonstrates a virtually unbroken decline from 1963 to 1980. Average verbal scores fell more than 50 points and average mathematics scores dropped nearly 40 points. College Board achievement tests also reveal consistent declines in recent years in physics and English.

As for not allowing entry into college or increasing requirements to enter, Koob said, "We're not allowed to withhold entry. We are required by law to accept students with open doors. The Board of Higher Education would handle those matters."

"We will continue providing our services as a learning institute for math and science areas. We won't be changing our program in any way. We can't penalize those students with lesser abilities or opportunities."

Koob's advice to math-deficient students is to spend their own time to get background. "The staff and curriculum is there to provide service and assistance, but it is the student's responsibility to help himself."

ENGLISH

The English department is equally concerned. Of the 1,605 students enrolled in English 101 fall quarter, 70 received Fs and an unknown amount of Ds or drops.

Dr. Richard Bovard, chair of the department, said there is an additional course recommended for those not meeting 101 requirements. English 196, "Basic Writing Skills," is a three-credit course taught by Dr. Jane Kegel. The course is still in a pilot stage, with only one section available.

The disappointing aspect of English 196 is it is only a recommended class and not required, Bovard said.

"Many students don't bother with building their English due to an already full-credit load."

Bovard said the English department has no way of screening English competencies of students before admission to college, nor before graduation from college. The only screening the English department really has is the English 101 class and by then, it's often too late to help the failing freshmen. The university refused a verbal-skill proposal several years back, which would help regulate English-deficient students.

"There is no uniformity of requirements and expectation established," he said.

"Nation at Risk" reports that average tested achievement of students graduating from college is also lower.

RECOURSES

What's a deficient student to do? Students may find recourse at Student Opportunity. It offers assistance to students needing help in areas of math, science, reading, writing or in developing study skills.

Philip Rognile, director of Student Opportunity, said students may receive help on a one-to-one basis, assistance, tutoring or may work in small groups.

Last year Student Opportunity served 600 students in needed areas. In most cases, commented Rognile, students using our help ended up with grades an average of one letter grade higher.

"Students do not need to feel alone in their struggling classes," said. Rognile recalls an instance when a nursing student came in for help in chemistry and found many of her classmates there also. "Her face lit up when she realized she wasn't alone."

Guidance to decrease income-deficient students may be close at hand. The Board of Higher Education has released a booklet to high schools in preparation for college. This booklet is also available from Academic Affairs.

In reviewing a national education report, "Educating Americans in the 21st Century," Scoby cited several specific recommendations. Two of these would affect math/science deficient future freshmen.

Recommended is an increase in requirements for high school graduation — three years of high school mathematics, (including one year of algebra) and three years of science and technology (including one semester of computer science).

Secondly, there could be increased requirements for college admission — four years of high school science. This science increase would include physics, chemistry and one year of computer science. Math would be increased with four years of algebra and coursework covering probability and statistics.

On a nationwide comparison, Kegel said North Dakota is up to standards for English requirements prior to admission.

be doing something right."

And they are, according to the reading test given throughout the 1970s by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, he said. "Those tests show us that elementary school and inner city kids are reading better today, not worse."

Crawford, who will address the World Reading Congress next year in Hong Kong, says the bad report schools received this year from the National Commission on Excellence in Education, called "A Nation At Risk," was a political document used to shock people.

That report, Crawford said, dramatically pointed out that 13 percent of all 17-year-olds in the United States are functionally illiterate.

"Sounds bad, doesn't it. But in a diverse country our size that tries to give a basic education to everyone—including minorities, the underprivileged, the handicapped—wouldn't you say that an 87-percent literacy rate was pretty good?"

"A Nation At Risk" was just one of several recurring attacks on reading education that became fashionable in the 1950s when Rudolph Flesch published his national best seller, "Why Johnny Can't Read." Crawford points out, though, educators were having similar disputes about how best to teach reading as far back as the 15th century.

"There are no miracles we can perform to make children better readers," he said. "I think the schools are doing a good job. But there's still a lot we can do."

To begin with, he said, research shows that reading habits are established early in life.

"Two facts stand out—one is the environment at home. If parents read to their children frequently, if they have books and magazines around the house and if the children see that their parents enjoy reading, that helps cultivate the seed. The other factor is how successful the children are when they first start school."

Most students in Japan, for example, are already reading before they get to school. Their mothers teach them at home.

"We know that a successful reading program begins long before a child enters school," he said. "It's absolutely critical that parents read books to their children."

If not, he said, the children might not develop a positive attitude about reading and could run into trouble starting school. That initial failure could influence a child's overall outlook on education.

But even a late start doesn't necessarily seal a child's fate in failure. What happens in the classroom also makes a difference.

"What the teachers have to do in school is make reading interesting to the students," Crawford said. "That should be first and foremost. But they're not going to do that by over-relying on basal reading programs, on the decoding techniques and the mechanics of reading."

Classrooms preoccupied with sterile drills and boring stories, he said, teach children that reading has nothing exciting to offer.

"Sometimes there's too much attention to detail," Crawford said. "When that happens, the kids don't get a chance to read because they're too busy breaking words down into syllables or doing worksheets. What we have to do is help students unlock the surface details from their own experiences and show them that these words can mean something in their lives. There's also a time to set the basal readers aside and appeal to each child's interests. Children learn to read by reading materials they enjoy and what they enjoy is real life experiences and stories rich with fantasy."

But the most important and often most neglected goal in reading education is teaching children how to think critically.

"Reading means thinking," Crawford said, "and because there's so much propaganda around us, political and commercial, it's essential we all understand the difference between fact and fiction—starting in the first grade."

That's why writing is so important to reading, he said. "By writing about what they've read, students have a chance to organize their thoughts and come up with their own ideas."

Yet some futurists predict reading will eventually become obsolete, replaced by the audio and visual functions of computers.

"If computers are supposed to be time savers, I don't think they can replace reading. We read by predicting written language and skimming, a very fast process. We'll never be able to listen as fast as we read."

Reading, Crawford said, will continue to be fundamental to nearly everything—politics, math, science, entertainment or making daily decisions.

"But we have to keep in mind that reading is a process, not a product," Crawford said. "To instill the right attitudes and skills in our students means, above all, to keep reading meaningful and interesting."

Pull the plug on student government...it's dead

Q: How do you kill a student government?

A: Let it die a natural death and when it starts to stink, bury it.

Editorial

SU students are spending too many activity fee dollars to keep an expensive corpse functioning.

It's time to pull the plug.

Student government at SU has withered away to an embarrassingly feeble state. It meets almost every Sunday evening but it accomplishes absolutely nothing of value.

Since fall elections, senate has yet to achieve representation for all housing and academic districts.

And when student representatives are finally found, many are eventually forced to quit if their grades fall below certain GPA levels or if they change residences or majors.

Last Sunday was a new low. There weren't even enough senators present to constitute a quorum.

Senate business in the first half of this school year has been almost exclusively self-management. They discussed how they should proceed with student elections, how to appoint leaders to senate vacancies, how to punish senators who don't attend meetings and what to do with errant student court justices.

On the other hand, student leaders have made some worthwhile contributions to students—a book exchange, an escort service-shuttle bus, a complaint/suggestion box.

It's always the same few student leaders who are putting in the efforts and coming through with results. The majority of senators are just marking time.

Right now more than $18,000 of your activity fee dollars are pumped into this dead organization. That's about how much you pay for the Spectrum you read twice a week.

That's $18,000 other student organizations can't use.

Rather than spend so much for a little, students should abolish student government and create a student services board to allocate student funds, run escort systems and hand out discount cards and activity cards.

Such a group—preferably smaller in number—can consist of the active student leaders who give a damn about SU.

Elections are being planned now. Why not find out who your senators are and tell them whether or not you think student government is worth the expense. It's your money. Are you happy with what you're getting?

Julie Stillwell

Off-campus students feel effects of AT&T/Bell split

By Kathy Mahoney

You can still reach out and touch somebody. But SU students, especially those living off-campus, are feeling the effect of the split between American Telegraph and Telephone from Northwestern Bell.

The break-up was the result of an agreement between AT&T and the U.S. Department of Justice and took effect Jan. 1. AT&T has now become one of the several companies providing long-distance service and telecommunications equipment.

Under the agreement, Northwestern Bell will bill customers for local services, whereas AT&T will bill long-distance calling.

According to Bruce Furos, in charge of executive marketing of Northwestern Bell, the break is confusing.

"People don't know who to turn to for continued servicing or repairs. It's been frustrating for our customers as well as employees," Furos said.

"The next couple of years could show doubling of the phone bill. In the past, our long-distance servicing was profit. Since AT&T's leaving, we've had to compensate for the loss and pass on actual costs of servicing to the customers."

Maynard Niskanen, assistant director of housing, said students on campus won't recognize the AT&T division this year.

"The housing department will temporarily absorb the differences," he said.

Price changes to the student will occur by fall of 1984. The present contract with Northwestern Bell ends in the spring. Decisions will be made at the time, he said.

The housing department has several sources surveying various telecommunication systems.

The present system used is a Centrex system of Northwestern Bell's.

"The desire at the present is to maintain and improve the existing system," Niskanen said. "January will give us more information to work with."

The housing department wants to keep up to par with new technology keeping the students' present and future needs in mind. Care will be taken as it is working with student dollars, he said.

"We feel confident about giving the service and keeping the cost down."

Novel '1984' gives 'doubleplusungood bellyfeel'

By Dennis Lange
WAR IS PEACE

FREEDOM IS SLAVERY
IGNORANCE IS STRENGTH

Welcome, my friends, to 1984.
First the good news—Humanity is doing much better than the wretched citizenry of George Orwell's famous novel, "1984."

Synthesis

Orwell's 1984 world is divided among three superpowers in a constant flux of war and changing

Dennis Lange. (Photo by Bob Nelson)

Alliances. There is no fundamental difference between the powers—Oceania, Eastasia and Eurasia. The ongoing wars and threats of worse wars are mechanisms the states use to control, manipulate and condition their own citizens.

Winston Smith is one such citizen in the bleak, alienating repressive country of Oceania. He lives alone, but has no privacy. Two-way telescreens monitor him even in his grimy, pathetic apartment. He lives in fear of the state's professional secret police and of denunciation by his neighbors.

Smith works for the Ministry of Truth—rewriting articles in back issues of newspapers so that the record of the past does not conflict with the state's present statements.

The government is instituting changes in the language. Newspeak, a no-frills language stripped of nuance, robs the people of the ability to speak and ultimately the ability to think or feel with any depth or complexity.

Love and friendship are suspicious, treasonous acts and curiosity is dangerous.

Too many questions, too interested a look, too much show of emotion, individuality or humanity and citizens of Oceania quickly become "nonpersons," records are rewritten and life, such as it is, goes on.

And everywhere there are the Stalin-like posters "with eyes (that) follow you about when you move"
captioned, "BIG BROTHER IS WATC HING YOU".

The good news is that Orwell's
"1984" is not our reality.

The ungood news is that reading
"1984" leaves one with the nagging realization that the themes of alienation, isolation, repression and loss of freedom and individuality are all to recognizable in our modern society.

First of all, Orwell was a satirist, not a prognosticator. Those who chortle that "1984" is irrelevant because Orwell's "predictions" were wrong miss the mark. That is like dismissing "Animal Farm" because the Holsteins are all still in the barnyard and pigs could never talk anyway.

"1984" is about alienation.

Smith is separated from his family, does meaningless work, is isolated from nature, has no friends and is permitted no passions. The state, personified by Big Brother, does whatever it can to strip Smith of everything that makes him human.
The state wants its citizens to be shallow, replaceable automatons.

Smith's crime is to resist automatonization.

He fights to maintain his humanity.

In "1984" we see exaggerated the compartmentalization, specialization and isolation that modern society imposes on us.

It makes us nervous; it makes us think. It ought to make us fight back.

Smith, alas, loses the fight.

"1984" was published in 1949.
Orwell's view of the world was colored by the memory of Hitler's Nazi Germany, the presence of Stalin's totalitarian regime in the U.S.S.R. and by a London still in rubble from World War II bombings. Orwell was dying of tuberculosis.

It is fair to say that Orwell wasn't at his optimistic best. However, we have more reason to be optimistic.

True, many jobs require us to act more like a piece of machinery than a human. True, many people are isolated from the cycles of nature.
Computers store more and more information about us. Governments exploit fear and hatred of foreigners to control their own people.

Nothing sounds more like "doublespeak" than the nonsense about the necessity to build more and more nuclear weapons to ensure world peace.

Language can be manipulated to call an invasion a "rescue mission" and make coffee a health food, but removing North from North Dakota and cold from the dictionary won't start your car when it's 30 below.

All in all, the principle that Smith calls "the Spirit of Man" is holding its own against Big Brother.

One element of "1984" that is sure to show us this year is an abundance of "duckspeak."

"Duckspeak" is speech that comes "directly from the larynx without involving the higher brain centers at all."

1984, election year, will sound like a million mallards in a cornfield.

Orwell and "1984" will be the topic of conferences, editorials, seminars, university classes and arguments throughout this year.

The F-M Communiversity will offer a class in February,
"1984: It's Here."

Minnesota Public Radio, KCCM and KDSU have been broadcasting programs about Orwell and his work.

SU's English department is offering a class titled "1984 and Newspeak."

The class will examine attitudes toward language in the 20th century — language of politics, advertising, jargon and "to what extent Orwell's views are relevant or misrepresented," according to Mary Wallum, associate professor of English.

Press Olympics games open to all SU students

By Betty Baccus

Buster U. Arcott, Bison athletic supporter and sometime Spectrum sports writer is all excited about the upcoming Press Olympics.

"I want in," he told me. "I've gone into training, eased up on the Twinkies and I'm doing a few push-ups."

I explained to Buster (who is known as Sneakers around the New Field House) that Press Olympics is not that kind of Olympics.

It is a series of workshops this month for students interested in photography and newspaper writing.

The Press Olympics sessions are also open to students who are curious about how the pros at The Forum Publishing Co. and the Spectrum go about getting their jobs done.

"Awesome," Buster said. "We'll find out why those jokers at the Spectrum are always cutting my best stuff and how they decide what news to print."

"Will I get to ask Ed Kolpack what he's got against Erv Inniger?"

I said Kolpack, The Forum's sports editor, wouldn't be on campus. But The Forum editors Terry DeVine, Curt Monson, Jerry Ruff and news photographer Dave Wallis would be.

The coach is also bringing in author Nancy Edmonds Hanson clear from Bismarck to add to the powerhouse of professionals.

"That's a fast pass," Buster said. (He always talks that way.)

"We'll see how these big-leaguers operate."

"And that's not the total score either," I told Buster. (Heavens, now he's got me talking that way.)

"Once you've learned a mittful of tips and pointers from the pros, you'll have a chance to show your stuff in the Press Olympics competition. And you don't have to go to L.A. to do it."

I told Buster his day to shine will be Saturday, Feb. 4.

Unless he sleeps through the training sessions, he'll be able to compete with the best of them in short events that focus on the finer points of writing and longer events such as investigative reporting, editorial writing—and yes—sports writing, among others.

Shutter bugs can snap up lots of photo tips to become better photographers and show off their work at the competition.

"Y'never know, Buster. There may even be some 'precious medals' for the winners. The plans aren't all set, but you can be sure the winners won't go home empty-handed," I hinted.

Hey, isn't the Spectrum paying its staff anymore? Where do they get funds to put on this mega-event?" Buster asked, scratching his head with the pencil he keeps tucked behind his ear. (He's heard a journalist is always prepared.)

I told him the sponsors are coming from all corners of the field. The Spectrum is contributing some, but because the Press Olympics is open to all SU students, assistance and donations are plentiful.

In addition to the The Forum and the Board of Student Publications, sponsors are the academic Communications department, the Office of Communications and University Relations, the department of Community and Regional Planning (lots of its students are rarin' to go) and the Cooperative Sponsorship committee.

"This sounds almost as big as the summer Olympics," Buster said. "Do you really think we'll be able to learn anything useful? I don't think I want to be a journalist..."

"Whoa up, Buster. The yellow flag is down, penalty on the play for rushing," I said sternly.

Buster found out you don't have to want to spend the rest of your life in Buster U. Arcott is REALLY excited about participating in the Press Olympics scheduled for Jan. 18 through Feb. 4. All SU students are eligible to participate. Prizes will be awarded and students may earn academic credit, also.

a newspaper office to get involved in Press Olympics. All of the assistant trainers use every day the skills he'll learn, but none of them have a newspaper office as their playing field.

Jerry Richardson, Mark Strand, Ray Burington, Lois Staszko and Mary Schieve, are all members of the Communications Office team at SU. They use writing or photography skills every day.

Steve Stark and Barry Brissman are signed with the Ag Communications office and they will be on hand to help with the education sessions.

Don't forget Lou Richardson. She teaches communications five days a week and she's helping teach a session, too.

"You're starting to sound of like 'ole Howard now," Buster said, noting my enthusiasm. "I wanna join the league. Just tell me where to sign up."

I reminded him he could use the form printed in the Spectrum to register for Press Olympics. Students who participate in four of the six events plus the competition (which makes at least five events, total) can earn one credit through Communications 498, Communications Skills Seminar.

"You've gotta go see the registrar referees for that," I told Buster.

"Just remember, the first 72 folks that sign up will get into the action. That's what they have room for, so you better hustle on over to the Spectrum office and get your coupon in. The Spectrum editor told me the coupons are coming in fast, so you better do some double-timing on the way."

Muttering to himself, Buster stumbled out of my office.

"What a year," he said. "The old national champions football caper, a powerhouse cage five and now the Press Olympics."

African art is on display at Plains Art Museum

By Millie Buekea
Features Editor

Distorted masks inspired by Yoruba mythology, divination boards, dance wands, blankets, gold weight, wooden stools and swords — such are the makings of an exhibit of West African Art, now on display at the Plains Art Museum, open Wednesdays through Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m.

Stereotypical masks come alive as one looks at a mask of a combative antelope form coming from the Zamle Society. The Society is a military order whose masks are sometimes called "Fire-spitters" because embers are placed in the mouth to present a frightening glow during ceremonial dances.

However, there are more than masks. A "Golden Stool" made out of blackened wood and standing 6½ by 13 inches is said to be the great symbol of the Ashanti people. Looking like something out of renaissance England, the stool is said to be a gift from heaven to the founder of their nation. Each royal chief is said to have had his own stool, which becomes the repository of his soul after death. Such stools are considered sacred and are preserved in family shrines, prayed to, sacrificed on and ritually bathed and anointed.

A woven picture cloth depicting a dancer wearing a fire-spitter mask and accompanied by other dancers, is said to have been woven on a strip loom and decorated with a dung- or mud-based paint.

Other weathered objects on display are rich with a mysterious symbolism that immediately gives one a sense of being in another time and space.

Many of the objects that form the permanent collection at the museum were donated by Albert Nicholson Votaw and his wife. The Votaws lived on the Ivory Coast for 15 years. The exhibition of the West African Art marks the opening of a new installation of the permanent collection and has been made possible by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

African art lectures

In conjunction with the exhibition of West African Art, the following lectures will be presented at 2 p.m. Sunday afternoons in the Plains Art Museum main gallery.

Jan. 15 — James Condell, MSU, "The Impact of Africa on Afro-American Artists"

Jan. 22 — Ernest Slingsby, Washington, D.C., "A Collector's Viewpoint"

Jan. 29 — Dr. John Tilton, SU, "African Folktales - Stories for the Entire Family"

Feb. 5 — Dr. Larry Alderink, Concordia, "Pre-Christian Religions in West Africa"

Feb. 12 — Susan Talbot-Stanaway, Plains Art Museum, "African Influences on Modern Art"

Feb. 19 — Dr. Virginia Barsch, MSU, "Society and Art in Africa"

African art is the topic of a show at the Plains Art Museum; the show is called Africa: The Black Kingdom. The show runs from Feb. 12 to March 27.

Social Services Guide

Spotlight on Social Services

Henry David Thoreau said many men lead lives of quiet desperation. Kevin Johnson would agree.

"There are a lot of uncomfortable people who are hurting—hurting quietly," Johnson said.

It was this "quiet hurting" that led three SU students to compile the list of social service agencies appearing in this issue of the Spectrum.

Johnson, Jayne Fiedler and Tony Knutson noted that people sometimes don't know who or where to turn when they have a problem.

Services such as SU's TAPE program, RAs and counseling and health centers may not be able to meet all student needs, Johnson said.

The trio hope the list will help fill the gap and alleviate some of the quiet desperation among students.

The Thundering Herd opened conference play this past weekend. The Bison were at South Dakota Friday night and visited Morningside on Saturday.

USD 103
SU 99

SU took it on the chin in its NCC opener Friday night as the University of South Dakota defeated the Herd 103-99 at Vermillion, S.D.

The cagers pulled within three points a few times in the second half, but both times were turned back effectively by the Coyotes.

The Herd was stifled by its inability to get its pressing defense to work the way it previously has. The team was beaten several times by long passes for easy layups by USD.

The Bison had a problem getting the ball to center Lance Berwald who only scored 2 points in the first half. He ended the game with 21 points and 11 rebounds on 10 of 11 shots from the field.

The big talk going into the game was about the match-up between Berwald and Coyote center Mike Bunn, who at 6-foot-7, is one of the top centers in the league. While Bunn finished with 17 points and 12 rebounds he was not the player who hurt the Bison the most.

The Coyote who did the most damage was reserve Mike Warren, who scored almost at will in the second half, tallying 23 points in the period and finished with a game-high of 30 points.

Morningside 82
SU 74

It was more of the same for Bison fans Saturday night at Morningside as the men's basketball team suffered its second conference loss 82-74.

Again the Bison met their match in the running game. The Bison had turned up their intensity level from the previous night, but it wasn't enough.

The Herd frontline was pushed around again under the boards, being out-rebounded by the defending NCC champs, 40 to 20. Lance Berwald had five rebounds, down from his season average of nine and also tossed in 25 points.

The Maroon Chiefs were hotter than a Bunsen burner, as they shot 60 percent from the field. Bob Beneke led Morningside by scoring 24 points with four other teammates in double figures as well.

The Thundering Herd shot 48 percent from the field for the game, and outscored the home team by five points in the second half. However, being down by 13 at the half is a difficult situation to remedy.

The two losses drop SU from its ninth-place ranking in the national polls and things may not get any easier in the future.

The Bison will be on the road again this weekend, traveling to Mankato State University on Friday and spending Saturday night as guests at St. Cloud State University.

Then — if there is such a thing as a break in the NCC — the Bison may get one the following weekend when they return to the New Field House, where friendly fans can have a hand in their fate.

Correspondence with U.S.S.R. exchanged

The people of Fargo, N.D., U.S.A. send greetings to the people of Tiumen of the Oblast of Tiumen,
U.S.S.R.

We love our cities and our country and hope for a future for our children. However, if there is a nuclear war, all that we value would be destroyed. As people who live in the Fargo area, we pledge ourselves to work to prevent nuclear war. Our nations must work together to create peaceful means of resolving conflicts and take steps to reduce the danger of nuclear war. We are working for these goals in our community and would like to be united with other people as they work for these goals in their communities.

By Dennis Lange

The citizens of the Siberian city of Tiumen, oblast of Tiumen, U.S.S.R. should receive a curious package from the post office within the next few weeks.

It will be postmarked Fargo, N.D., U.S.A., and will contain a letter of greetings from Fargo Mayor Jon Lindgren, a copy of the Fargo Forum, some American Indian beadwork made by Joyce No Heart, maps, photos and a letter signed by Fargo citizens with an invitation to write back.

This is not the typical advertising packet sent out by the Chamber of Commerce to woo conventioners.

It is a tentative overture that organizers hope will help lessen the tension between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"We believe that communication between people is a necessary part of preventing nuclear war," states the cover letter that will accompany the Fargo packet.

Ground Zero, an American peace organization, originally hoped 1,052

American cities would send packages like Fargo's to "paired" Soviet cities as a symbolic, peaceful alternative to the 1,052 missiles that make up the U.S. ICBM arsenal. The packages were to have been mailed en masse Nov. 23. Although some cities have already sent off packets, Fargo intends to have its-city portraits in the mail this week as does Moorhead, which is paired with Lysra in the Ural Mountains.

Dr. Warren Thomsen, MSU mathematics professor, has helped organize the local projects.

He says he has no idea whether Fargo or Moorhead will get a response from the Soviet cities, but he is optimistic. "It certainly can't hurt anything."

Thomsen has encountered some criticism of the project. "Some people think that if you're for peace, you're unpatriotic," he said.

Step aside, Oscar Mayer; SU processes meat

By Kathy Mahoney

Oscar Mayer beware. There is a new way to make B-O-L-O-G-N-A at SU.

Animal Science 344 is a three-credit course offered winter quarter through the animal science department. The class is held at Shepperd Arena Lab 102, on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6:30 to 9 p.m.

According to Martin Marchello, instructor of the course, the students enrolled gain practical experience in sausage-making for home processing. The class works with beef and pork, although other meats have been tried. Some examples of its finished products range from summer sausage, braunschweiger and bolonga.

Students learn the importance of the chemical reaction of curing meats. A proper cure can guarantee longer storage of meat.

Marchello teaches the process of the cure. Students learn what composes smoke and its effects in the curing process.

"You can begin with the same meat stuffs, and the smallest variation in cooking length or temperature change in the thermal process can result in a change in meat texture or taste, giving the meat a whole new character," he said.

Students also learn about the seasonings and spices of sausage production. Specific spices can complement and bring out the flavor of the meat.

As well as home processing of sausage, the students also learn about the commercial end of the business. They learn of the various meat cuts and carcass evaluation in relation to meat selection for sausage production.

Marchello says the most exciting aspect of the course is when the students bring recipes from home to make sausage. "It's interesting to see the family recipes handed down from generations past."

The course is only offered winter quarter.

Marchello is associate professor of animal science and has been teaching the course since 1971.

Escort service still alive and well; ridership substantially increased

By Kevin Cassella
News Editor

SU's escort service—more appropriately the ride service—will be in business for at least another month according to Dennis Presser, the student senator who has been coordinating its operation.

The service will continue operations through January with the previous route and schedule in effect.

Student government is pleased with the students' favorable reactions to the service and ridership is going up quite substantially, according to Brad Johnson, student president.

Once the advertising campaign got underway, ridership increased from 25 to 61 students, Presser said.

Student government has been receiving student input for improvements in the service, Johnson said.

No decisions have been made on whether to continue the service during fall and spring quarters. Other options may be available for those quarters, he added.

'The Atomic Cafe' examines all aspects of nuclear war

Nuclear war is examined from all angles in the film, "The Atomic Cafe," at the Moorhead Public Library's "Thursday Nite Live!" at 7:30 p.m. January 12.

Three independent film-makers created "The Atomic Cafe" by spending thousands of hours looking at government file footage and public documentaries produced between 1945 and the present. The result is both a complex and an incongruous compilation of images depicting America's confused attitude toward nuclear power and "the bomb".

The film is open to the public at no charge.

Coach Don Larson's record speaks for itself

By Balmson Fadipe
Staff Writer

When Don Larson accepted the position as Bison head coach for the men's cross country and track team four years ago, he had no idea that he would ever have to complete the mission impossible — a solid program.

During his coaching career at SU, his cross country and track team has been active at the national level and in the North Central Conference. Larson, 30, a native of Madison, S.D., has proven himself to be one of the most successful coaches in the NCC.

He has led his team to five NCC titles and completed his mission impossible last year by winning three titles in one season, which has never been done in the history of NCC.

In 1983, his team won the cross country and both the indoor and outdoor titles.

According to Larson, the fourth place finish was the highest the team has ever placed at the national level since 1973.

What are his secrets to a winning and successful program? Well, ac-ording to Larson, it takes a good team communication, hard practice and quality recruiting.

"You have to recruit the kind of athlete that likes to work hard and that's one thing that we've always promised our athletes — that they will have the opportunity to work harder than ever before in their lives," he said.

Larson, who served as an assistant coach at Concordia College for three years before coming to SU, was named the 1983 NCC track coach of the year. He is no stranger to the world of track and field competition either.

Larson was a two-time NCAA II All-American and three-time NCC champion during his college athletic career at South Dakota State University where he received his bachelor's degree in physical education. Two years later he completed his master's degree at MSU. He currently holds one NCC record in the indoor 600-yard and he was a member of the SDSU outdoor mile relay team who held the NCC mark that was broken by his own SU relay team in 1980 at the conference meet in Brookings, S.D.

According to Larson, other Bison staff and coaches have been supportive in creating his winning team. "It feels real great to be around other coaches that have successful programs. It motivates you to have a successful program."

Larson feels this year's team is stronger than last year's. "We are going to be very competitive this season," he said. "We have lots of team strength in every event, although we have a few weaknesses."

Another bit of good news, besides the coach's having another top team this season, is the addition of an assistant coach Dan Fabian.

Fabian, 29, a native of Fargo, joined the Bison staff last fall. He is a Concordia College graduate and former track squad member in the quarter mile.

"I came to SU because it has a good program and a good reputation," he said. Fabian will be working the distance and the middle-distance runners, which will provide Larson with more time to concentrate on his other duties as head coach. Larson will be handling the sprinter and field events.

According to Larson, other Bison staff and coaches have been supportive Tom Skaar, the other Bison assistant coach, is in his third year. He is a former track squad member, having participated in the decathlon and hurdles. He is three-time NCC champion in the hurdles and also the conference record-holder in that event. Skaar was appointed team captain in 1980. He is currently working toward his master's degree at SU. According to Larson, Skaar will be working with the decathlon and hurdlers this season.

have many of his athletes qualify for nationals. "We have 10 people that qualified for national last year and we would like to see more people qualify this year. We certainly have the people of that caliber, but it all comes down to their willingness to put in the time and the work," Larson continued.

"You do not make it to the nationals by adopting a laid-back attitude in practice, because it takes lots of hard work to get to the national championship," he concluded.

Four Little Falls women play basketball for Bison

By Tom Stock

The SU women's basketball team doesn't have a junior varsity, but it appears that Amy Ruley, women's head basketball coach, is trying to get a team started from Little Falls, Minn.

This season the Bison have four women who hail from the Little Falls High School women's basketball program. They are Tina Keller, a 5-foot-7 senior guard; Leeanne Grosso, a 5-foot-11 junior forward; Betty Spillum, a 5-foot-8 sophomore forward and Mary Jaschke, a 6-foot freshman center.

"Little Falls has a very successful high school program," Ruley said.

In 1980, Little Falls won the Minnesota State High School Women's Basketball Tournament. Jaschke let-

SU and Little Falls play about the same type of game, she added. "We were a pressing team in high school and we liked to run, just like NDSU."

She would like to have school records in steals and assists, but her main goal is to keep her turnovers down.

"Tina has played and contributed since her freshman year; she is committed to the program," Ruley said.

LEEANNE GROSSO

Junior Forward

Ruley said she saw Grosso play in her junior year during the 1980 state tournament.

"We recruited Leeanne during her senior year," Ruley said.

Grosso passed up the offer at SU to take a scholarship at New Mexico State University. During her sophomore year she was voted co-captain by her teammates.

"I was unhappy with the program," Grosso said.

"Last year I decided to transfer. I was thinking about either SU or St. Cloud State University. I thought I would probably go to SCSU, but coach Ruley called me and asked me to come up to NDSU to take a look at the school and the basketball program," Grosso said.

"I fell in love with this school."

Grosso will have to sit out this season as a red-shirt, since she transferred schools.

"Being a red-shirt is frustrating. It's hard to just watch and observe during games," she said.

"It will be a long season for me. I don't feel as much a part of the team, not playing," she added.

Next year Grosso will be eligible to participate and she can also play during the 1985-86 season.

She said being on the same team with three other Little Falls women is advantageous.

"It's neat to know these people and how they play."

She said it wasn't like starting over when she transferred to SU because she knew about the school and the basketball program through other Little Falls teammates.

"Leeanne has contributed in workouts. She's competitive, aggressive, encouraging and coachable," Ruley said.

Next year Grosso should break into the line-up at the forward spot.

BETTY SPILLUM

Sophomore Forward

Before SU joined the NCC, it was in the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW). In the AIAW, teams can hold auditions where coaches can bring in high school athletes and evaluate their

"I wish I would have gone out last year."

Last year she said she practiced almost every night and played intramural basketball.

Jaschke said she didn't start playing basketball until eighth grade and this was a disadvantage for her.

"I've been playing catch-up since I started playing."

She said playing with three other women from her high school is a plus. "It helps in the sense that I know what they are like."

This way the team doesn't have to start all over again and they can move on to higher-level strategies with more ease, she said.

Her goal is to take her abilities and go as far as she can with them and also make her mark on the SU record books.

Ruley said having four women on the team from the same high school

Tina Keller.

tered in 1980 as sophomore and Keller, Grosso and Spillum were all starters on that team.

Little Falls finished third in the state tournament in 1981.

TINA KELLER

Senior Guard

Keller was Ruley's first recruit. "I was interested in the school and I decided it was for me," Keller said.

She is in her fourth season as a Bison athlete. She was Academic All-Conference last year and is close to breaking the school record for career steals.

She said college basketball is different from high school basketball. "It doesn't seem the same. All of us are older and more mature."

Betty Spillum.

skills.

Ruley said this is how SU recruited Spillum.

Spillum said she has a sister, Tanya, who goes to SU and she wanted to come here too.

"I like our coach and the basketball program. I'm a math major and NDSU has a good math department," Spillum added.

She said it doesn't make a difference to her to have four people from the same high school on her college team.

"We are running different plays with other people; it's like we never played together in high school," she said. "It's a whole different situation."

She said she likes college basketball better than high school basketball because she can meet new people, travel and play an advanced type of game.

"My goals are to contribute and play my part."

MARY JASCHKE

Sophomore Center

Jaschke is a sophomore, but sat out her freshman year.

"I like SU and I thought I could always play basketball after I found out what college was like."

Mary Jaschke.

doesn't separate the team.

She said it will be impossible for all four women to be on the court at the same time, because Keller is a senior this year and Grosso is a red-shirt.

Keller and Grosso played a lot of basketball together. Grosso said she wanted to play on a team with Keller again, but that won't be possible because Keller will have graduated by the time Grosso becomes eligible.

Ruley said she enjoys having the four Little Falls women playing on her team. "They're really nice girls and it's a lot of fun."

Mark Twain will come alive in SU classroom Thursday

(NB) — A slightly stooped, aging gentleman, clad in the celebrated white suit and jaunty red ascot (that have become his trademarks) will visit English classes Thursday.

Dr. Bill Cosgrove, professor of English, has told his students to expect a visit from Mark Twain/Samuel Clemens, well-known frontier humorist, creator of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn and rambling storyteller.

Cosgrove's impersonation of Twain grew out of a one-man show he developed with the assistance of a grant from the N.D. Humanities Council and he presented this at high schools and service clubs around the state. He is appearing locally at the Oak Manor in Fargo for supper club shows during January and February.

During his performance Cosgrove reveals many facets of Mark Twain's character — the garrulous old man delighting his listeners with musings on his bad habits — "smokin', drinkin' and cussin' come to mind right off" and the humorist — "You see, I'm opposed to millionaires, but it would be dangerous to offer me the position."

For his students, Cosgrove will present "His Grandfather's Old Ram," a story Twain wrote for stage use.

Women cagers split weekend road games

By Donna Lee
Staff Writer

The Bison women's basketball team split games on the road this weekend by losing its North Central conference opener at South Dakota's DakotaDome Friday 74-67 and coming back Saturday to sweep Morningside College, 86-67, in non-conference action.

Both nights it was the freshmen who held the reins for the Bison. Friday it was 6-foot-2 Lisa Stamp who pulled down 16 points and 13 rebounds and Saturday 5-foot-9 Annette Ambuehl tossed in 20 points and grabbed eight rebounds. Stamp again played a significant role from the floor tallying 16 points and nine rebounds for the evening.

It's been that way for the Bison freshmen this year. They seem to be the core that is giving an added push to the veterans who are still holding their ground, but are watching closely over their shoulders

USD 74
SU 67

The Bison had a slow start on the weekend as they opened North Central Conference action against South Dakota, last year's NCC champions, 67-74 at Vermillion.

Both Stamp and Tina Keller were in double figures for the Bison scoring 16 and 15 points, respectively, but South Dakota's Karie Wallen scored 18 points to lead the Coyotes to victory.

While USD held a slim lead at the half 33-31, they came back to carry the momentum in the second half racing to a 17-point lead.

It was the first conference game for both teams and the first stint since the Bison returned from the University of Miami Classic, where they picked up one win and two losses.

SU 86
Morningside 67

While the Bison filled the statistical columns against Morningside, the Chiefs had problems fighting back and when they seemed to falter, finding themselves ahead of the Bison only with fouls and turnovers.

The Bison followed closely with 23 fouls, but were able to cushion themselves with 47 rebounds, five steals, four players in double figures (Ambuehl, 20; Stamp, 16; Kim Brekke, 16 and Sally Kamm, 12) and only four turnovers.

At the half, the Bison had raced to a 12-point lead, 40-28, and a short two-minute spurt in the opening of the second half was the last for the Chiefs as they came within eight points, 34-42.

From then on, it was only a matter of time. The Bison took off and wound up with their biggest lead of the game when Stamp scored on a field goal with 1:50 remaining to boost the Bison's lead to 20 at 65-65. Stamp added a free throw seconds later and the Chiefs scored from the field with 50 seconds showing on the clock to end the game at 86-67. The Bison's overall record stands at 7-5, while in NCC action they stand at 0-1.

Bison basketball team looks ahead to season of play

By Michael Morey
Sports Editor

With the opening of the North Central Conference season this past weekend, the Thundering Herd appears ready and willing to challenge for the conference title.

Press Box

The Bison looked consistently sharp in posting eight wins against two losses, while tuning up for conference play. This reporter thinks the Herd has an excellent chance to finish as one of the top three teams in the NCC.

The team is led by senior center Lance Berwald, both in leadership and scoring, at just under 21 points a game.

With the losses coach Erv Inniger's squad has sustained so far at the forward position, it's a wonder at all that the team isn't challenging for the bottom of the conference, let alone the top spot.

With the departure last week of 6-foot-5 Steve Langendorf, who went home to join his father in business, the Herd lost three good-sized forwards for one reason or another. John McPhaul has transferred to MSU and 6-foot-5 Mike Schutt is lost to the team for the season with an injury.

With the added loss of 6-10 backup center Bill Sopher before the season started, a team that could once boast both size and quickness, can now only display its speed.

The quickness is probably the main reason I pick this team to bring home the conference title. The quickness enables Inniger's masterful pressing defense to create more than its share of turnovers and easy baskets.

With a starting lineup of Berwald, 6-foot-6 Chad Sheets and 6-foot-2 Mike Bindas at forwards, and a guard tandem of 5-foot-8 Albert Hairston and 5-foot-10 David Ryles, Inniger has the personnel to make his gameplan work.

With Bindas, who started at guard last year and still practices with them in the lineup, the Bison will have essentially a three-guard team on the floor. With Bindas, Hairston and Ryles, they have the outside shooting to keep opponents from collapsing on Berwald inside.

Junior forward Sheets, a Moorhead native and second on the team in rebounds and scoring, has the ability and the chance this year to prove he can do it all.

Blessed with an accurate outside shot, Sheets can also hit the boards like a power forward. He loves to play the running game here and Inniger will certainly give him the opportunity.

The Herd also has a surprising degree of depth in the reserves coming off the bench. It starts with Dennis Majeskie, a forward last year, but this season he's seeing plenty of time as backup center. At 6-foot-7, he could easily be one of the top forwards in the conference, but will instead fill an important role when Berwald gets a rest.

When you get to the forward spot on the Bison roster, that's when things start looking pretty thin. At 6-foot-5, John Milton will have to be a tower of strength off the bench for Inniger, while Steve Stacy, a 6-foot-2 transfer from Bismarck Junior College, has the outside shot to keep teams honest underneath.

The situation is much better at guard for the Herd. Kevin Coughlin, a starter for several games last year, and Senior Kelvin Wynn give the team much needed experience to back up Ryles and Hairston. At 6-foot-1, Wynn might see some duty at the small forward spot as well.

The promise Inniger made when he took the head job here to play exciting basketball will certainly not be broken this year. Stay tuned, Bison fans, the best is yet to come.

Intramural season is in full swing at SU

The winter addition of intramural sports is in full swing following the holiday break.

For a number of athletes, pursuing a college career in organized athletics isn't practical. Natural barriers such as being 6-foot-7, weighing 280 pounds or having lightning speed limit most people to a less time-consuming program like intramurals.

There are a number of sports available for men and women. Basketball, broomball and racketball are offered for both sexes. Men can also participate in hockey, wrestling and water polo.

All information necessary to join intramurals can be obtained at the Intramurals office in the New Field House.
