adviser award nominations sought

By Julius Homelvig
 Nominations are being accepted for the Outstanding Adviser Award. This award was established last year by the Mortar Board to recognize exceptional advisers. One adviser is selected out of each college including the Institute of Teacher Education. Then one of these eight will win the university award.

Mortar Board looks for advisers who help students clarify goals, explore their opportunities, plan classes and keep track of their progress. They should seem genuinely interested in the students and establish open communication, according to Julie Haber, a Mortar Board member.

Applications for nominations can be found with posters on campus and in the library and the Union. Applications should be turned in to the Union by April 6.

Clipper vacates, copy shop opens in Union lower level

To provide better copy service for SU students and to provide better information service to visitors on campus, a new copy service has opened in the Union's lower level, according to Bill Blain, Union director.

Its hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Evenings and weekends, students can have copies made at the Activities and Information Desk.

The decision to have a copy center came about when the beauty operator decided to discontinue her business. A committee investigated the possibilities of renting the space to another operator, he said.

"That was our first choice, to fill the space with a progressive operator."

When an agreement failed to develop, the committee explored other possibilities and decided on the copy center, he said.

Diabetics sought for health study

(NB)—The Fargo-Moorhead Diabetes Self-Care Project at SU is conducting interviews to determine what kinds of things make it easier or more difficult for diabetics over 65 to maintain a self-care regimen. Interviews will be conducted at SU, or in the homes of diabetics. Feedback on a new blood test that tells how well diabetes is being controlled will be provided. There is no charge for participating. For more information on either project call 237-7348.

Most of the people I admire went through phases in their lives when they could be called punk. Cranky, rebellious, apt to try anything once; but always striving for a vital synthesis of old and new life and art. The luckier, more talented ones—with a little help from their friends—sometimes do achieve it, like the self-described punks below, pictured on a Hamburg rooftop a quarter of a century ago. This is the end of a phase for me, a phase successful far beyond what I could have hoped for alone. These are my debts: First, NDSU—it's a great institution. Thank you Jerry, for three years of superb leadership. Thanks to Bill Blain & Campus Attractions for irreplaceable leadership experience and personal development. Nowhere else but CA. Thanks Neal, for enduring friendship, Fammes and hameouts. Thanks to Bruce for fine motor vehicles. Mary Gardner, you were a trusting mentor and you are a beautiful friend. Thanks to John Lennon, who I never met, who showed me I could cry. And for three years of inspiration, trust, teaching and utter amazement, thank you Kathy Foss Bakum. You paved way for a punk to become an artist. I hope I never let you down.

Soap operas are as much fun as gossip

By Gail Williams
Arts Editor

There are two kinds of people — those who watch soap operas and are foolish enough to admit it, and those who watch soap operas and are wise enough not to admit it.

Editorial

No longer for bored housewives, soap operas attract a variety of viewers. Producers are increasing their efforts to attract young people. In one poll, 25 percent of the people who admitted to soap-watching were men.

Soap operas enjoy the same reputation as gossip and the two entertainments are similar in some ways. Some people have had the experience of entering a fascinating conversation with the questions, "Who are you talking about?" only to discover that whoever died or was pregnant or having an affair was a soap-opera character.

Agnes Nixon, a soap-opera producer who has had at least one soap on the air for the past 24 years, said on CBS Morning News that daytime soaps were not really similar to night-time soaps such as Dallas.

Night-time soap opera characters are on the air only one day a week, while daytime characters come into our home five days a week with no reruns. That's a total of 260 hours a year and at that rate, it's possible to spend as much time with a soap-opera family as a real family.

Daytime soaps are allowed to carry more advertising than night-time soaps. Last year, according to the CBS Morning News, soap advertising generated $75 million advertising dollars.

That's not soap flakes. Soap operas run the gamut from cat food to mouthwash and even Dr. J puts his kids to bed during one of them.

Sometimes the commercials seem to be of better quality than the soap operas themselves. Soap opera plotlines and themes are predictable. The dialogue on a given day can range from "I'll always be there for you, Warren," all the way up to "Self-righteous jerk!"

A common complaint about soap operas is they do not tell us about real people with real problems. There are too many doctors, lawyers and models on soaps to represent a real cross-section of society.

People in Shakespeare's time might have complained that he only wrote about kings and princes, but Shakespeare knew that people wanted to believe their problems were universal. Soap opera fans manage to identify with the characters in the same way.

Soap operas have not been afraid to tackle real-life problems such as alcoholism, homosexuality and incest. Occasionally, valuable information filters from among all the glitter.

The glitter may be another reason why people watch soaps.

"Furs by the Christy Brothers," one announcer intones at the end of a soap. Soap-opera stars are nearly always models of fashion and a person could keep up with the trends just by watching.

"The Big Event" is a soap opera staple, which really allows the glitter to shine. Usually it involves some sort of extravaganza such as a wedding or party. "The Guiding Light" is fond of costume balls including a Southern-style fete last summer and more recently, a masked ball.

Another reason people tune in is for "the cliff-hanger." Two weeks ago people tuned in to "Days of Our Lives" to find out whether Marlena was really dead. A few weeks ago viewers were wondering if Roman on the same soap was really dead. (By the way, he isn't.) cliff-hangers take weeks, dedicated viewers watch every

I watch soap operas and I'm probably foolish enough to admit it. I try to retain a superior smirk while I watch "The Guiding Light." One day I found myself smiling broadly at a vision of young love and Phillip cavorted in a park with people who try not to like soap operas can get hooked.

Nicaragua status critical, help needed for harvest

The situation in Nicaragua is extremely critical at this time. The Nicaraguan economy which depends heavily on only a few agricultural exports has been under increasing attack from CIA-backed counter-revolutionaries. Several hundred million dollars worth of damage has already resulted from attacks such as the one against the vital oil storage facilities at the port of Corinto last October.

successful coffee harvest this year.

In the United States, the National Network in Solidarity with the Nicaraguan People (NNSNP) is trying to coordinate volunteer participation. U.S. citizens have a particular role in this harvest, because if it were not for our government's open attempts to overthrow the government of Nicaragua, Nicaraguans would be free to develop their own political life and their own economy in peace.

By participating in the volunteer coffee harvest, I hope to show as an American citizen, I stand with the people of Nicaragua in the face of need and that I oppose the policies of the Reagan administration. I urge others to support me. Write to NNSNP for further information on how to help the people of Nicaragua and to make donations. The address is: NNSNP, 2022 Street NS, Suite 402, Washington, DC, 20006. The time has come to get Central America back to its people.

Letters

Nicaragua needs a successful coffee harvest to be able to purchase basic food stuffs, medicines, spare parts for industry and transportation, and oil. Because of the urgent political and military situation, many Nicaraguans have been mobilized in the defense of their country and cannot participate in the December-February coffee harvest this year.

That is why I have chosen to respond to Nicaragua's call for international work brigades to ensure a suc-

Stassen: push food, not nuclear weapons

Harold Stassen (Photo by Bob Nelson)

By Dennis Lange
 Harold Stassen is a candidate for presidency of the United States again. He has been chasing the Republican Party's nomination for the country's highest office more or less continuously since 1948. He brought his campaign, such as to Fargo last month where he addressed the Republican District Convention.

Synthesis

Stassen is the presidential candidate who thought he could, thought he could, thought he could, thought he could and still thinks he can — sort of.

In fact, Stassen, the "Boy-Governor of Minnesota," came close to winning the GOP nomination in 1948. According to a news analysis in the July 5, 1948, Newsweek, would have been a cinch to defeat Democratic incumbent, Harry Truman that November. Newsweek, or course, also considered Thomas Dewey, the eventual Republican nominee an unbeatable, sure-fire shoe-in.

Stassen's torch never burned as bright again. It never really caught fire again at all, but that did not prevent Stassen from rubbing a couple of dry sticks together every fourth year.

His persistence in the face of nearly impossible odds and his quixotic campaigns have made Stassen into a standing joke. What he told the Fargo Republicans was no joke and was more than a little discomfiting to the party loyal.

Stassen's speech followed a political pep talk by North Dakota Governor Allen Olson. Olson gloated over what he perceived to be the successes of the Reagan administration and made it perfectly clear he intends to tie his re-election campaign to Ronald Reagan's coattails.

Stassen's speech let a little wind out of the Republican's self-congratulatory balloon.

Stassen was strongly critical of the Reagan administration's foreign policy which he believes is inflammatory and dangerous.

"We must recognize that the people of Russia are co-passengers on this spaceship Earth," he said.

Stassen agrees with those who call for a freeze in the level of nuclear weapons. "Republicans should not be putting them (pro-freeze supporters) down," he said.

"It is wrong," he said, "to push nuclear weapons into Germany. Instead the United States should be pushing food into Poland."

He said U.N. peacekeeping forces should have been sent to Lebanon rather than American forces. Stassen is a great supporter of the United Nations. He was a U.S. delegate to the 1945 conference which drafted and signed the U.N. charter.

Finally, "It is wrong to have the CIA hire Nicaraguans to kill other Nicaraguans."

Stassen spoke in the unequivocal manner only long longshots can afford.

At age 76, Stassen has no illusions about ever winning the Republican nomination — well maybe a couple flickering ones.

What he seriously hopes to do is bring about some changes in the policies of the Republican Party.

And that's no joke.

'Threepenny Opera' set at Concordia College

(NB) — "Threepenny Opera," written by Bertolt Brecht, will be performed at 8 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and at 7 p.m. Sunday at the Frances Frazier Comstock Theatre at Concordia.

Directed by Clair Haugen, associate professor of speech communications and theatre art at Concordia, the play is based on John Gay's 18th century satirical work, "Beggar's Opera."

The play tells the story of Macheath, a robber king, whose downfall is caused by envious business rivals and a large number of jealous, angry and vindictive women, two of whom are his wives.

But just at the moment of his execution, when Macheath is standing on the gallows, rope around his neck, a messenger arrives to announce that Queen Victoria has pardoned him, made him a knight and granted him an estate.

Haugen explains that Brecht forces his audience to think as well as laugh by having the characters in the play interact with them as he develops his theme of choosing between high morals and mere survival.

"In this world, some people may 'sell' anything in order to survive," Haugen says, "but existence is not always nice."

Portraying the character of Macheath will be Jeff Horn, a freshman from Paynesville, Minn. Other characters include Janet Morsch, a senior from Moorhead, Minn., as Polly; Leslie Severson, a sophomore from Willmar, Minn., as Lucy; Jon Loy, a senior from Cloquet, Minn., as J.J. Peachum; Kathryn Bryson, a freshman from Spring Lake, Minn., as Mrs. Peachum; and Julie Limoseth, a freshman from Cincinnati, as Jenny.

Ticket information may be obtained by calling the Theatre Box Office.

Swiss mime-mask group to perform Friday

(NB)—Mummenschanz, a Swiss mime-mask theater group that has broken through the barriers of conventional pantomime to create a fanciful new manner of theatrical expression based in part upon the ancient Swiss tradition of "the masks," will perform at 8:15 p.m., Saturday in Festival Concert Hall. The program is the final production in SU's 1983-84 Fine Arts Series.

The group derives its name from the German "Mummem" meaning game or play, and "Schanz" meaning chance. During Medieval times, players of games of chance frequently wore masks to hide their facial expressions during the play. Mummenschanz actors, unlike classical white-faced mimes, employ a remarkable collection of masks and body wrappings in their work. Their faces are not seen.

Garbed in fantastic wrappings ranging from toilet paper to balloons to playdough, members of the company become beings without faces, amphibious animals and caterpillars, monsters which can be viewed on both sides. Raw animal heads change into human faces and various parts of their bodies become transformed. Arms become legs, heads become necks, the back becomes the belly.

But even though the Mummenschanz actors may be completely covered with putty or rubberfoam, the presence of man is undeniable, and human feelings—aggression, failure, success—are reduced to their essential expression. Theirs is a retelling of life that is entertaining, funny, provocative and inspirational. They are capable of touching each member of an audience, regardless of age, with a program that is "for children pretending to be grown up, and for grown-ups who can still imagine being children."

Mummenschanz has been performing for audiences all over the world—North America, South America, Europe and Asia, for almost a decade. In 1977, the group opened at the Bijou Theater on Broadway and ran nearly three years to unprecedented critical acclaim.

The company will be in residence on the campus March through Saturday.

For ticket information, contact the SU Memorial Union Ticket Office.

Volunteers needed to aid restoration of Fargo Theatre

(NB)—The Fargo Theatre Management Corporation recently announced that plans are under way to begin the process of restoring the historic theater to its 1937 art deco design.

Originally built in 1926, the theater had undergone a complete change in 1937, when it was modernized to the new deco style.

Although the lobby was changed again in the 1950s, the auditorium and stage remain structurally as they were in 1937.

Volunteers are in the process of cleaning and painting, returning the theater to the colors used when it reopened in 1937. Long unused lighting effects are being repaired, adding to the beauty of the design created by Leibenberg & Kaplan, the architects responsible for the design of the theatre.

All work is on a volunteer basis, with materials donated by area businesses. The board of directors expressed gratitude to those firms who have made the project a reality.

ATOS has been a part of Fargo Theatre history since 1973, when the group began restoration of the now-famous Wurlitzer theatre organ. Long-term plans include a grand opening celebrating the beginning of this exciting restoration, featuring films, big band music and dance.

This special program is scheduled for late April.

Dave Morinville announces plans to coach 1984-85 SU hockey team

By Rob Wigton
Staff Writer

The SU hockey club received a healthy shot in the arm last Thursday as Dave Morinville announced his plans to handle the coaching duties for the upcoming season.

Morinville guided the squad during its initial campaign as well as serving as the head hockey coach of the Fargo North Spartans. He led the Spartans to two state championships during his years at North.

Wednesday evening Morinville announced his resignation from the Fargo North position and said he would accept the full-time position with the Bison Hockey Club if it would be financially feasible.

"I feel the Bison Hockey Club is meeting a community need; the fan support has been excellent," Morinville said at a news conference at the Fargo Coliseum.

"The NDSU students have been behind us an awful lot. It's been a dream for a long time ... I'm looking forward to the 1984 season," he added.

"We're betting on the community backing to finance the season next year," Bob Nielsen, club adviser, said.

The Hockey Club will be playing a 27-game season next year. The club will be playing 16 home games, with the open tentatively set for Bemidjia State, a Division II power.

Both Nielsen and Morinville indicated the club is progressing in a comfortable manner ... one step at a time. Morinville said the SU administration is taking a "wait and see" attitude toward the future development of the club.

Nielsen said community fundraising events along with continued strong ticket sales at home games are keys to keeping the club on its feet financially.

The newly named coach said there will be some recruiting involved as far as gathering members for the 1984 squad.

"Right now we are having students come to SU to play hockey. People are writing in to request information on the hockey situation at SU," Morinville added.

"The university itself is a drawing card as far as recruiting players goes. There are a lot of students who have professional career aspirations who would also like to play some hockey," Nielsen added.

Morinville's contract is on a year-to-year basis. The full financial details of the contract were not disclosed.

Grant helps handicapped learn computers...

By Mary M. Jaschke

SU was chosen as a $26,000 grant recipient for computer training for the handicapped because of efforts by Dr. Reid Stevens, assistant professor of education, and Ritz Hare, mathematical science professor.

The grant money is being used to purchase four Columbia VP portable computers and to train four handicapped individuals computer programming skills.

"A need had to be created," Stevens said. "I wrote a proposal and we were later issued the grant."

The grant was received in late September and the program was put into operation in early October.

The program is set up to train moderate to severely handicapped individuals in career fields such as microcomputer programming that isn't influenced by their handicaps.

When the 10 months of training are over, these individuals can be employed as computer programmers in area small businesses. The program should be completed at the end of this summer.

"This program will help fulfill the needs of small businesses in the Fargo-Moorhead area."

The four now going through training were referred to SU by the North Dakota Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.

After going through a series of interviews, the four students were chosen on the basis of motivation, mathematical ability and overall qualifications.

Results of the interviews done by Stevens and Hare were sent back to the Vocational Rehabilitation Office for final candidate selections.

Kathleen Cleary, Don Christie, two graduate assistants and a tutor make up the program's training staff.

Cleary, a math and computer science instructor, is doing most of the group instruction.

Christie, a graduate in counseling and education, is acting as a liaison between the training program and the area business community. He promotes the training program to area small businesses and communicates their ideas and needs back to the coordinators and training staff.

The four handicapped students began training winter quarter. Classroom instruction takes place on the fourth floor of Minard Monday through Friday. The students first attend a group lecture for 1½ hours, then they work individually.

These students began actual on-computer training in early January.

The Columbia VP personal computer was chosen for the program because of its IBM compatibility and portability.

"Because most small businesses use IBM computers and software, we felt these were the best suited for our purposes," Stevens said.

The portability of these computers will help handicapped individuals adjust to travel disabilities. This feature will also allow an individual to work at home.

The cost of supporting a handicapped individual is much higher than the earnings these students will receive with computer-programming training.

When these people are working their dependence on social security and other government help payments will be less. According to Stevens, these students will be able to support themselves upon graduation from the program.

"This program is a first of its kind," he said. If the training program is a success, there is hope for future expansion.

"I think it's fascinating to see the impact of technology on decreasing the hindrances of physical and emotional disabilities," he said.

"It's nice to see people use what is available to make life easier."

...one student explains how it helps him

By Mary M. Jaschke

A $26,000 grant received by the education department has enabled four handicapped individuals to train in computer programming.

One student is a young Fargo man, formerly from Glyndon, Minn., who requested his name not be revealed.

He began the training program this fall and is pleased with it.

"This program has given me an opportunity for training I might not otherwise have had," he said. "I like the one-on-one instruction and the instructors are great."

He took agriculture courses for one year at SU to help advance his farming career before surgery to remove a brain aneurysm in 1975, which left his left side paralyzed. Harsh Fargo winter conditions caused him to transfer to Arizona State University in Tempe.

Having a longtime interest in computers and a feel for the business world, he began training for a career as a Certified Financial Planner (CFP).

"I've always been interested in computers and I was told in high school that it was the coming thing," he said.

However, the Reagan administration's budget cuts changed everything for him.

"His cuts (Reagan's) left me and many others with little or no financial help or benefits."

He first heard about the new program after returning to Fargo last June. "I called the Vocational Rehabilitation Program and they told me about it."

After some testing, he was accepted to the program and he plans to complete classroom training in May and finish his internship in early fall.

He also plans to use his training for a career in business.

"I hope to have a good job in computer consulting, using my farming background. I see computers as a necessity for farmers in the years to come," he added.

Continuing his education is another goal.

"I want a degree in computers or accounting and I only have two years left."

He is only one of a small group of four being trained and he hopes to see it expand.

"It's hard for handicaps to find employment if they don't have an education and it's a tax incentive for employers to hire (these individuals)," he said.

There are a lot of people who are in need of a program like this.

"I would like to see this program expand here and in other places," he said. "This is a great opportunity."
