BIOGRAPHY

Fredric Samuel Hultz was named the president of the North Dakota Agricultural College (NDAC) on August 24, 1948. He was a native of Iowa and received his bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees from Iowa State College. His fields were animal production, genetics, and agricultural economics. Prior to coming to NDAC he served as a professor at Pennsylvania State College; while at the University of Wyoming he served as a professor, head of the Department of Animal Production, and presidential assistant. He authored three books: Range Beef Production, Range Sheep and Wool, and Corriedale Sheep.

Soon after arriving at NDAC Hultz announced a ten-year building improvement program for the college. After requesting a substantial contribution toward the program's completion from the state legislature in 1949, NDAC received its largest appropriation ever. Several building and remodeling projects resulted. During Hultz's presidency over thirty buildings were constructed, earning Hultz the nickname, "brick and mortar president." Complementary to his construction accomplishments was his policy of re-naming campus buildings that before had either generic names like "Science Hall" or no names at all. Campus beautification, which was another of Hultz's objectives, led to specifications regarding landscape architecture and street arrangement.

While the Hultz administration was extremely successful in terms of campus development, it was not without controversy. A rift in faculty-administration relations was particularly pronounced from 1953 to 1956. Some of the faculty accused Hultz of such things as (1) focusing on physical facilities at the expense of salaries, (2) not consulting with the faculty on decisions affecting the college, and (3) violating policies of academic freedom and tenure. The third accusation resulted when the State Board of Higher Education requested the resignation of four NDAC professors who allegedly attempted to undermine Hultz's authority. In the end, the Board upheld Hultz's administrative authority and the four professors were dismissed. Faculty-administration relations gradually improved.

Perhaps the greatest single occurrence at NDAC while Hultz was in office came during his final months as president. Much to his excitement, voters made possible the name change from "North Dakota Agricultural College" to "North Dakota State University." Four months later, in March of 1961, Hultz announced his resignation, effective that summer, citing poor health as the reason. He died, still in office, in April.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Fredric S. Hultz records consist of substantial (approximately 23 l.f.) subject files maintained by President Hultz from 1948-1961. The records consist of the following series: State Board of Higher Education Series, General Campus Department and Office Series, Correspondence and Subject Files Series, Committee Series, and Name Change from NDAC to NDSU Series. The records are arranged chronologically by calendar year or by fiscal year. Within the series, arrangement is alphabetical. There are inconsistencies, however. For example, H.L. Walster can be found by "W" for his last name, by "A" for his position as Agricultural Experiment Station Director, and by "S" for his position as the School of Agriculture Dean.

The State Board of Higher Education Series consists mainly of correspondence and memoranda between members of the Board and Hultz regarding official state and university policy issues.

The General Campus Department and Office Series contains records of the college's various schools, deans' offices, departments, experiment stations, and the Cooperative Extension Service.

The Correspondence and Subject Files Series contains a great variety of records. Some of the most common subject files are the Association of Land-Grant Colleges and Universities, North Dakota Council of College Presidents, Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads, National Science Foundation, United States Department of Agriculture, President's Cabinet, and YMCA and YWCA. Prior to the records for 1960, note the grouping of years from 1948 to 1959. This grouping consists almost exclusively of addresses given by Hultz.

The Committee Series contains only the boards and committees exclusively affiliated with NDAC or NDSU. Many of these are committees of the College Council or University Council (predecessors of the University Senate). For more records of those committees, see the University Senate Records. Committees that were not affiliated with NDAC or NDSU are listed in the Correspondence and Subject Files Series.

The Name Change from NDAC to NDSU Series appears only in the years 1958-59 and 1960. It contains newspaper clippings promoting and opposing the name change, promotional materials, correspondence, and general materials.
